A Depressing Outlook

ADOLF HITLER'S recent speech before the Leipzig supreme court can not fail to add to the uneasiness which Europe has felt since the last German parliamentary elections.

In his speech, Hitler set forth just what he proposes to do, if and when he gains power in Germany. His program is not reassuring.

Hitler declares bluntly that his party is pledged to do away with the international treaties under which Germany now labors. If these treaties can be wiped out by ordinary diplomatic means, well and good; if not, they will simply be broken.

If one could only write Hitler down as an irresponsible, loud-mouthed politician the situation would not look so bad; but Hitler, unfortunately, occupies a position of vast influence, and may become more influential instead of less during the next few years. His party is gaining strength among the electorate; worse yet, there are constant rumors of a putsch by which they will seize power forcibly. It is not at all improbable that Hitler will one day rule the German state.

If he does, and if he breaks the post-war treaties, what then? There could be only one answer—war. Like the last one, it would probably become a general European war, with all hands trying at one another's throats.

Not for years has the future looked so dark. Barely 12 years after the end of the worst war in history, a new one is taking shape on the horizon. And there is no use in fooling ourselves—a new European war, on anything like the scale of the last one, would simply mean the downfall of European civilization.

The time to move to avert this war is not some future date, when the conflict is actually about to begin; it is today, while the nations involved are still willing to listen to reason. To drift during the next few years is to invite disaster.

A Century of Progress

ONE hundred and five years ago Saturday, George Stephenson's historic locomotive, "No. 1," drew a train consisting of six wagons of coal, one passenger carriage, 21 coal trucks, fitted with seats, and six more wagons of coal, bringing up the rear. It carried 450 passengers, traveled at six miles an hour, and was preceded by a rider on horseback carrying a flag.

There had been other "successful locomotives" before that date. One was built in England by a Cornish mine, Headley's "Puffing Billy" was constructed in 1813, and Captain in 1801. Fenton, Murry and Wood built one in 1812, Stephenson constructed another in 1814.

In 1825 the Stockton and Darlington Railway company began operations, and Stephenson was the engineer of the "locomotive" that pulled the historic train.

In comparison with present day locomotives, it was like a toy, both in size and performance. But it was the beginning of the modern locomotive.

Railroads of today furnish rapid means of transportation. Its present development is far beyond the ideals and hopes of the first inventors. Supplemented by autos, trucks and airplanes, modern transportation has reached a state of speed that would have been unbelievable 105 years ago. One wonders what it will be 105 years from now.—Fayetteville Leader.

Hobbies: An Unusual Incident

HOBBY: A subject or pursuit in which a person takes an extravagant or persistent interest. (Century Dictionary.) In order to get the most out of life every citizen should have a hobby. Theoretically a hobby should be completely and entirely divorced from the occupation by means of which each person earns his livelihood. In this country an unusual group of statistics could be compiled to indicate the number of different hobbies represented.

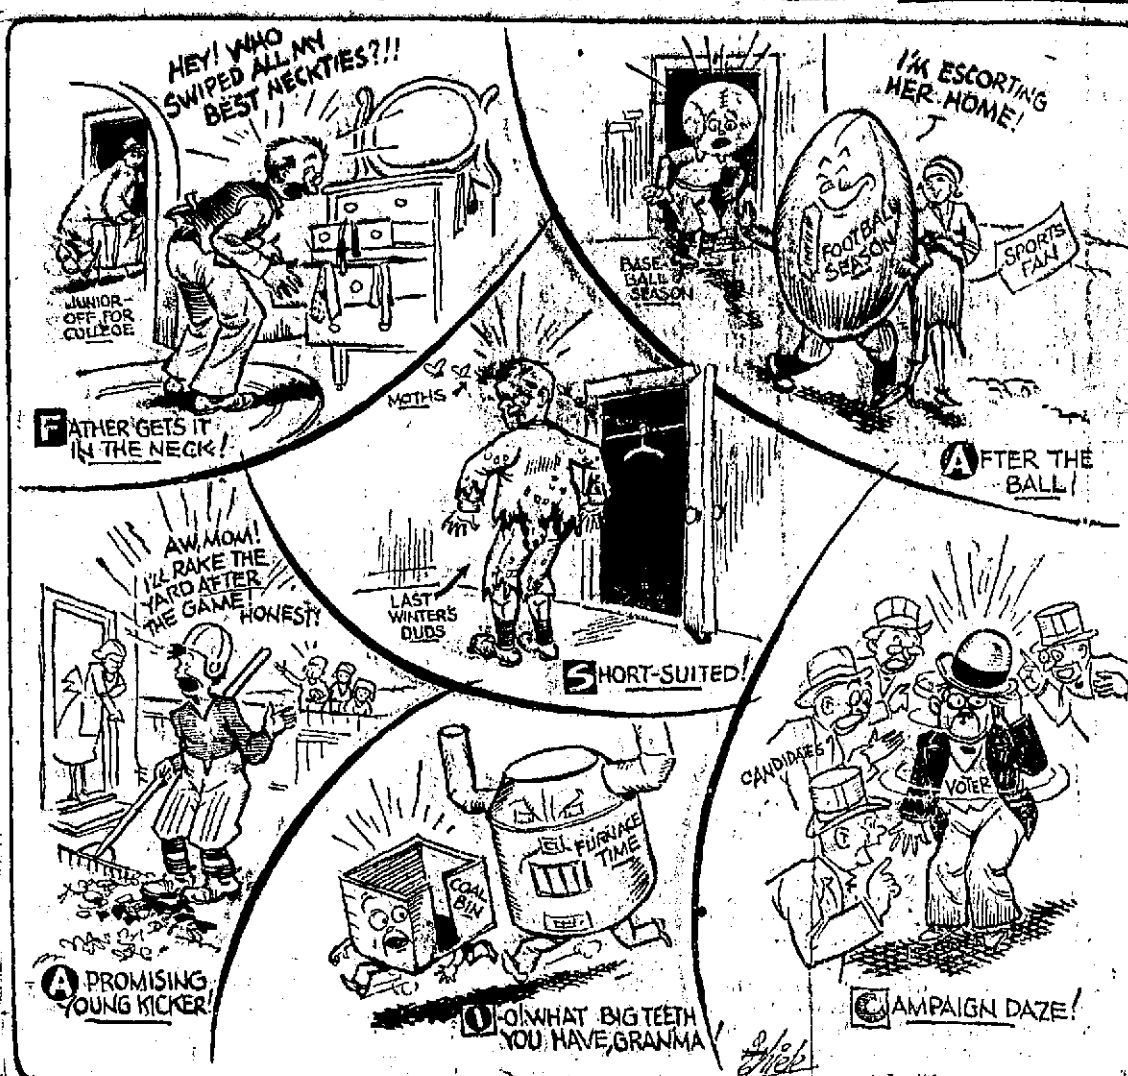

In another state the editor has come in contact with an interesting case. A very successful business man developed as his hobby the propagation and rearing of fish. He maintained elaborate rearing ponds and restocked many streams.

Having amassed a fortune in his business, and having reached the age at which leisure should be enjoyed, he retired from business which he sold, and devoted himself entirely to his hobby. The result was not a period of leisure but of complete absorption in the hobby to the extent that he became a well known professional in his line and his hatcheries became the goal of tourists.

How many people in Harrison have a hobby? Is your work your hobby or have you another which occupies your spare time?—Harrison Times.

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—Now the government is going to raise pearls and will be making life miserable for many oysters which never did anyone any harm and never will.

Pearls are being planted in Pearl Harbor under supervision of the Bureau of Fisheries, following discovery in the Hawaiian Islands of the only colony of pearl oysters known to exist in American waters. The discovery was made in the lagoon of Pearl and Hermes Reef about 1200 miles northwest of Honolulu and the idea of transplanting a few thousand bushels of pearl oysters to Pearl Harbor and raising them under tender care arose from the fact that it would be easier at the latter spot to tend and study them.

Many oysters produce pearls voluntarily, but there is only one way to compel an oyster to produce a pearl, cruel as it sounds. The method is to stick something into the animal's flesh which will so irritate it that it throws out the pearl substance until the foreign object is completely surrounded and becomes the center of the pearl.

When a grain of sand gets into a pearl oyster it becomes the nucleus of a flat pearl because it is against the flat side of the shell and flat pearls aren't worth much. But there is a microscopic shell fish which imbeds itself in the oyster sometimes and becomes the foundation stone for a nice round pearl. And so Uncle Sam will be sneaking those little shell fish into oysters out at Pearl Harbor just to see how prolific these American pearl oysters can be made.

Surveys Pearl Beds

Dr. P. S. Galtsoff, pearl oyster expert of the bureau, has just finished a summer of survey and investigation in the Hawaiian Islands, returning to Honolulu with specimens for development. The navy lent the mine-sweeper Whippoorwill for the purpose.

The Bureau of Fisheries had been called in by the governor of Hawaii, who felt that if there were any pearl beds in the territory they ought to be conserved rather than left to the destructive tendencies of private concerns which were wading into them. So the survey was begun to determine the extent of the beds, what measures should be taken to perpetuate them and how to increase production by artificial means.

Pearl oyster beds formerly existed in Pearl Harbor, so it seemed a feasible plan to transplant and cultivate the oysters there.

The pearl oyster isn't the kind of oyster you get on the half-shell by the dozen or half-dozen. It resembles a couple of dinner plates fastened together and facing each other. It is eight or ten inches in diameter and weighs anywhere from two to seven pounds. It also contains the valuable mother of pearl which has a wide commercial market.

Dew Drop Theory Blasted

Once upon a time scientists knew nothing about how pearls were created, but they had plenty of ideas. For many centuries the most learned men of Europe accepted the ancient theory that pearls were formed from drops of dew or rain. In the sixteenth century, however, explorers and students began to ask how the dew got into the oyster and refused to believe the previous theory that at certain times the oysters rose to the surface and opened their maws especially to receive it.

Then for a couple of centuries it was commonly believed that pearls were formed from the oyster's eggs. It was explained that when the oyster laid eggs one or two were likely to stick within the shell and become pearls. But finally it became suspected that pearls were made of about the same substance as the inside of the oyster's shell. First a French physicist proved this by examination and by 1761 the Swedish naturalist, Linnaeus, was artificially producing pearls, though not good ones.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Oct. 1.—(UP)—A man who beats his wife cannot become an American citizen, decreed Judge Cyrus E. Patton, in denying final citizenship papers to a Milwaukee man. The man, whose name was not divulged, applied for final naturalization papers five years ago and came back to receive his final papers. Records were produced to show he had beaten his wife 100 years ago and the papers were refused him.

The John C. Chapter of The Daughters of the American Revolution held a most interesting meeting yesterday afternoon at the home of Miss Mary Carrigan on North Elm street with Mesdames J. R. Henry and J. T. Dovi, as associate hostesses. The Carrigan home rich in historical heirlooms formed a beautiful setting for this meeting, honored by having with them the State Regent, Mrs. William H. Arnold, the State Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Frances Mullins and the Regent of the Texarkana chapter, Mrs. Floyd Thompson, all of Texarkana. During the business period, it was announced that Mrs. Sam Alexander of Pine Bluff would in the near future place a marker at the grave of her grandmother, buried in the Washington cemetery, with the John C. Chapter in charge of fitting ceremonies. Mrs. Arnold gave a splendid address on the "Constitution." Miss Mamie Twitchell gave some very interesting facts relating to the flag followed by Mrs. Talbot Field who contributed one of her delightful vocal solos. At the conclusion of the program, the guests enjoyed an informal social hour looking at some of the many interesting heirlooms in the Carrigan home. The hostesses served a delightful ice cream.

Mrs. and Mrs. S. D. Slack and Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Davidson of Gordon were week end guests of Dr. and Mrs. W. G. Allison.

Mrs. Terrell Cornelius, Mrs. Max Cox, Mrs. Robert Campbell, Mrs. Tully Henry and Mrs. W. N. Dent spent today visiting with friends in Texarkana.

Jimmie Slack of the Magnolia A. & M. College spent the week end visiting with Dr. and Mrs. W. G. Allison.

Mr. Chas. Haynes and her guests, Mrs. Wm. H. Arnold, Mrs. Frances Mullins and Mrs. Floyd Thompson, of Texarkana, and Mrs. J. A. Henry and Mrs. Chas. Spragins motored to Washington yesterday morning for a visit to the old state house and the old cemetery.

Museum Acquires Utah Lodestone

Natural Magnet Obtained in Wasatch Mountains Weighs 400 Pounds

CHICAGO, Oct. 1.—(UP)—A huge natural magnet or lodestone weighing 400 pounds and possessing unusually powerful magnetic strength has been secured by the Field Museum of Natural History in the Wasatch mountains of Utah.

The peculiar powers of attraction of lodestone were well known in antiquity and it was these properties of the mineral which led to the development of the magnetic compass by the Chinese in the 12th century. Lodestone is a variety of the mineral magnetite. A steel needle placed in contact with a lodestone will in a short time become so magnetized that, if free to move, it will point toward the north pole. It was observation of this phenomenon that suggested the compass. However, the polarity of the mineral was not discovered until hundreds of years after its powers of attraction for iron and other metals were known, according to Dr. Oliver C. Farrington, curator of geology at the museum.

Thales of Miletus (630-550 B. C.) mentions the power of lodestone as do a number of the later Greek sages, says Dr. Farrington. "There is a fable that the discovery of lodestone was made by a Cretan shepherd who noticed that his iron-tipped sandals and iron-shod crook clung to the earth. Digging into the ground, he found lodestone."

The properties of magnetite which seemed mysterious to the ancients explained a powerful hold on their imagination; and gave rise to numerous fabulous stories. These extravagant tales were based upon a misconception of the power of lodestone. "There were stories of magnetic domes which held statues of iron and even of brass suspended in the air, and there were accounts of mountains of lodestones which drew all the iron nails from ships which ventured near them, so that vessels sailing in these seas were obliged to use wooden pegs for nails." Historians have differed concerning the discovery and practical application of the compass. It has been attributed to many peoples of Europe and Asia. Chinese fables describe various devices for direction finding such as chariots whose figureheads always pointed south, at various times before the Christian era. "Some European authors seem to indicate an occasional use of the compass as early as the third century, but the first authentic records of its use do not antedate the 12th century. Shortly after this time compasses came into general use by navigators. The first compasses were magnetized steel needles which were fastened to chips and reeds and floated on water."

Smith, of Camden, commander of the Hugh McColm camp of veterans. General J. W. Hollis, of Little Rock formerly of Camden, will resign because of ill health, Smith said.

A number of Camden veterans and sons and daughters of veterans plan to attend the reunion which opens October 6. They will also attend the state fair which is in session that week.

Smith said he would be a candidate for the state commandery.

Hope To See Bobcats In Action Against DeQueen

Prospect For School's Football Team Bright This Season, Although Many Hard Games Are Listed On the Schedule

The local field at Fair Park Friday afternoon will be the scene of the third game of the season for Hope High Bobcats when they go into action against DeQueen.

Hope's football team is off for a tryout start this year and in the two previous games, with Ashdown and Magnolia the opponents have failed to score a single point over the Bobcats. This is of course a record that is unusual for the first two games. Especially is this so when it is remembered that some of the men who helped to win those two games never played football before in their lives.

The old rival, Prescott, has always been the meter by which Hope's football strength is measured, and this year will be no exception to that rule. In the season, each year these two old rivals meet to battle it out, and looking forward this year from the beginning of the season it looks as if things might turn out somewhat different from the traditional order.

A Magnolia player was heard to remark just before last week's game that Hope had enough men for four football teams. This is nearer to being literally true than he probably thought, for Hope could very easily if necessary get together just one less team than that and have a few extras left out of the candidates who have accepted this year to cheerfully accept their pro rata of the cuts, bruises, blisters and the like which are all considered a part of the season's game.

Taken as a whole, the school's football prospect is bright. Not for a good many years has the material been available nor the interest in the game been in evidence as it is right now. Coach Wilkins is fast taking what was in some cases raw material so far as football was concerned and moulding it into an efficient machine that will well represent Hope High School on the football fields of the district this season.

Fayetteville Claims Largest Ball Player

Fatty Clark Weighs 320 Pounds and Is From Oklahoma

FAYETTEVILLE, Oct. 1.—Fayetteville fans are claiming the world's largest football player in W. H. "Fatty" Clark, 320-pound sophomore from the University of Arkansas Razorback team.

Clark, who hails from Pawhuska, Okla., won his freshmen numerals last year. In a game with Oklahoma Military Academy last year, Clark proved to be simply too much for the Cooner line, then plays automatically stopping when they reached his tackle position.

Coach Fred C. Thomsen is planning to use Clark at tackle to stop some of the Southwest Conference foes.

The students relate that Clark has trouble when he first entered school getting a bed that he could sleep in. Finally it was decided a special bed would be built for him as his average bed measure before that time had been only one night.

Albert Adams Holder of New World's Turf Mark

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—(UP)—Albert Adams, 17-year-old Baltimore apprentice jockey, is now the holder of a new world's record for the turf, having ridden nine straight winners at the half-mile Marlboro track, near Washington. The old record of eight was held jointly by Ivan Parke and Walter Miller, famous jockeys of the past.

Adams barely missed making it ten straight when he finished second after his ninth win. He started his record when he came out on top in the sixth and seventh races on one day's card and followed this with six straight wins on the next day.

of baseball ever handled more and greater pitching talent than the master of the House of Mack.

Down through the years they have left indelible marks—the eccentric but brilliant Waddell, the taciturn Bender, the cool and dependable Plank, iron-man Coombs, Bullet Joe Bush, Knuckleball Eddie Rommel, the modern strikeout king, Grove, and the hard-working Earnshaw.

Great as these have been, Mack unhesitatingly regards the late Christy Mathewson as the greatest pitcher of all time, a tribute to "Big Six" all the more remarkable because it comes from the most successful of American League managers.

"Taking everything into consideration, I should say Matty was the greatest," Mack once told me, turning over carefully in his mind the memories of a half century in the game. Seldom has Connie been willing to make comparisons, but he continued:

"Mathewson had a world of stuff, a great head and great heart. He was

"I did not want anything to eat. I was in bad shape. I thought I would try some Cardui. The first bottle seemed to ease the pain some in my back. I took another bottle, and then I felt more like eating. I noticed that I had more strength and my work seemed easier. My back didn't feel so awfully bad when I had to stand. I could sleep better and felt more rested when I got up in the morning. I took six bottles of Cardui. I certainly think Cardui is a good medicine for women. Try Cardui in your case."

CELIA MITCHELL, 17, faces a new life when she leaves the home in Baltimore where she has lived with her stepmother, MARGARET ROBERTS, to join her father, JOHN MITCHELL, and her grandmother in a stately New York dwelling.

The girl had not even known her father was living until the day he came to the Baltimore apartment. Celia had supposed her father was dead, and she had been brought up by her mother, who had been married to her father's first wife.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XVII

THE motor car turned into a wooded lane and ahead, set well back from the road, Celia saw a large white house. Mrs. Parsons waved a hand toward it.

"That's the place," she said. Then glancing at a wrist watch she added, "we've made good time driving."

"It looks lovely!" Celia murmured.

"I'm fond of it. This is where all my happiest hours have been spent," Evelyn Parsons' voice seemed so sincere, so sweetly brave that sympathy welled in the girl's heart. She had been told that Mrs. Parsons was a recent widow. And she had no idea that practically every visitor to Larchwood had heard the same speech about Evelyn's "happiest hours."

The house was named for this double row of trees," Mrs. Parsons explained. "It was built by Dwight's father years ago."

Celia, feeling she was in the presence of grief, remained silent. The car swung into the driveway. Close-cut, rolling lawn stretched to either side and beyond, shading the rambling colonial house, were more of the larch trees. There were hollyhocks, larkspurs and other old-fashioned flowers at each side of the entrance. Green and white striped awnings covered the windows. Larchwood appeared delightfully hospitable.

"What a beautiful home!" Celia Mitchell exclaimed. She was contrasting it mentally with the Mitchell's dignified town house.

Mrs. Parsons smiled. The chauffeur was holding the door of the car back for the two to descend. Mrs. Parsons gave him instructions about the baggage and then led the way to the house.

A maid in becoming green uniform opened the door.

"Good morning, Miss. Have there been any telephone messages this morning?"

"No, ma'am."

"Good! Celia, Miss. I'll show you to your room and whenever you're ready, my dear, we'll have luncheon. There are one or two housekeeping tasks I must attend to. Shall we say luncheon at 1:30?"

"Oh, yes—any time. You mustn't bother about me—"

"Not the slightest bother! Take Miss Mitchell upstairs, Miss."

Celia followed the maid. She was conducted to a cool and airy bedroom on the second floor. The room was brightly furnished in early American style with an old-fashioned four-posted bed, small, colorful rug, chairs and a high chest of walnut.

HILDA departed and Celia made sure that the door had closed securely behind her. Now that she was alone the girl seemed excited. For an instant she listened at the door, then swung herself on the bed, drawing from her jacket a crumpled object. It was a letter.

"Miss Celia Mitchell, East 21st street, New York," the address read. The handwriting appeared to be familiar. Celia surveyed it a moment. Then she pressed the envelope to her heart. She flung her head back, smiling ecstatically. Quickly Celia ripped the envelope open and drew forth the folded sheets. The smile vanished. Celia read feverishly:

"Dear Celia: It was certainly a tough break that was handed to me Saturday. Do you know where I was when your train pulled out? I half way to Glen Burnie chasing Joe Park, the guy who escaped from the penitentiary last week. No, we didn't get him, but it was an exciting afternoon."

"You see, I had everything lined up so I could finish early Saturday. Bradford was supposed to take my assignments after three o'clock. I was just about ready to beat it when the tip came in. Morgan yelled at me and said, 'You take this, Shields.' Well, of course there wasn't any use arguing."

"Casey went with me. It was a private tip to the city editor that Park could be found at a house out there where a girl lives he used to be seen with before he was sent up. All the papers in town have been playing the Park story all week. It seemed like a hot lead, and we sure turned up the road. Well—that's about all there is to tell. It turned out there wasn't any such house number, and after two hours we decided there wasn't any such girl either. Finally when we called the office Morgan decided the whole thing was phoney. There was my afternoon gone—and you gone, too!"

"I called up your mother that evening, but I guess she didn't get my message. Anyhow, I wasn't able to see her until last night, and that's why I couldn't write before."

She gave me the address. I hope you've been having a fine time in New York, and that your new relatives improve on acquaintance. I haven't got the raise yet. If it isn't on this week's pay check guess I'll have to have another session with the M. E.

"There isn't anything else to tell you except that it seems about a million years since you were here. It isn't any fun driving alone evenings. Looks like a long summer ahead. I certainly was sorry not to be able to say goodbye at the station. Hope you'll write soon and tell me you haven't forgotten a certain evening I have in mind. Believe me, I haven't. It's awfully lonesome here, Honey."

Lois of love,

BARNES.

There was a rustle of motion in the hallway. Celia Mitchell, intent on the letter, did not hear it. The sound was repeated; then there came a knock at the door.

"Who's there?" she demanded.

"Your luggage, ma'am."

SHE recognized the chauffeur's voice. Celia breathed a sigh of relief and then said: "Bring the bags in."

The interruption reminded the girl that downstairs Mrs. Parsons would be waiting. Already it was a quarter after one. She could not resist, however, reading the last two paragraphs of Barnes' letter again before she folded it and hid it away in her purse. Then with a hasty pat at her hair and a dab of powder on her nose she was ready for luncheon.

She and Mrs. Parsons were the only two who were present for the meal. The other guests, Mrs. Parsons said, would arrive that afternoon and evening.

The house seemed even larger, viewed from the interior, than outside. On the entrance hall there was a huge living room with a fireplace, bookcases and a great many comfortable over-stuffed chairs. The dining room, on the other side of the house, had broad windows looking out over the garden. Celia glimpsed other rooms opening from these. She was particularly pleased by the wide porch reached by French windows in the living room. Surely if the house had been built long ago, Evelyn Parsons had done much to modernize it.

"You must do just whatever you like this afternoon," Evelyn said as dessert was being served. "Kate and Lisl Duncan are driving over with Walter Carr. They'll be here any time. Eve and Courtney Brooks promised to come by tea time. They're not really much older than the rest of the crowd, though they've been married three years. Eve used to be Eve Carpenter. Courtney dabbles at being an artist, and they spend as much time abroad as they do here. By the way, I understand you and your grandmother are going to France in September."

"Yes," Celia said. "I can hardly believe it, though."

"How I'd love to be the one to show you Paris!"

"Oh, Mrs. Parsons—that would be wonderful!"

The older woman smiled.

"I'm glad you think so. We ARE going to be friends, aren't we, Celia dear? Good friends!"

Celia felt she should proclaim loudly that this was true. The situation called for it. And yet infrequently—but at this particular moment—Celia Mitchell was aware of a sharp, uneasy distrust of Evelyn Parsons. It was almost as though the lovely widow was too sweet, too eager to befriend her. After such moods passed Celia was always ashamed of them.

"—appreciate everything you've done for me," she answered now. "I want to be friends, Mrs. Parsons."

EVELYN PARSONS patted the girl's hand.

"Sweet child!" she said. "Isn't it fine your father is going to be able to come down tomorrow? He's such a slave to his work, poor man! I suppose that's the price of brilliance."

Again Celia felt that twinges of doubt. She gazed up at her hostess and encountered serenely blue eyes, smiling lips surely incapable of deceit. Celia banished her fears and branded them evil.

But though Mrs. Parsons had insisted the girl should choose her own entertainment, she kept her young guest beside her through the afternoon. There was no opportunity for Celia to slip away and write the letter she was so eager to send. Instead she inspected the garden with Mrs. Parsons, drove to the village with Mrs. Parsons and finally welcomed guests with Mrs. Parsons. A good share of this time (though Celia did not notice it) was devoted to conversation concerning John Mitchell.

The Duncan girls and Walter Carr came late. It developed they had stopped to see some tennis matches. Eve and Courtney Brooks drove up at four o'clock in a handsome car of foreign make. Jimmy Webster, who joked a great deal about his career as a young bond salesman, did not arrive until just before dinner.

There was one other guest. Celia noticed his dark hair and erect shoulders the minute he appeared. She was sitting at the far side of the living room. She saw Evelyn go forward to meet him with outstretched hand, but she could not hear Evelyn's words.

The tall youth with the dark hair bent his head. He had understood perfectly.

"Which one is she?" he asked.

Canada's Atlantic Coast provinces had an increase of almost four per cent in the market value of the fish caught last year over the 1928 yields," says the bulletin. "The market value of the fish caught in this area in 1929 amounted to $20,855,613."

"The fish taken in the Atlantic Coast provinces come, for the most part, from the sea, but Québec and New Brunswick have small inland fisheries on a commercial scale."

"The most notable advances in the market value of fish taken along the Atlantic coast last year occurred in the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. In the former, the value of production rose from $5,061,641 in 1928 to $5,935,885 last year, and in the latter province, the increase was from $1,185,577 to $1,366,428."

"Nova Scotia is the great codfish producing province. Last year the value of its product in codfish alone amounted to $3,504,583. The lobster fishery is second in importance in this province. The sardine fishery takes first rank in New Brunswick, and the lobster fishery takes first place in Prince Edward Island."

Wolf and Coyote Capture Reported

Method of Trapping Killers of Livestock Explained in Booklet

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—(UP)—To capture a wolf or coyote one must match with strategy their cleverness in avoiding capture. These animals are still a source of worry to stockmen and sportsmen of the west because of their destruction of livestock and game animals. They are uncanny in their ability to escape man's efforts to keep them under control.

The Bureau of Biological Survey of the Agriculture department has issued a new leaflet describing the method of trapping these animals. This is given as the most successful way to capture them. The leaflet is entitled, "Hunts on Coyote and Wolf Trapping."

The areas most heavily infested with wolves are in Alaska, eastern Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan. Coyotes also exist in all the western states.

"The Coyotes," states the leaflet, "is the most persistent of the predators of the western range country, and is a carrier of rabies, or hydrophobia, and tularemia, a disease of wild rabbits and rodents that is transmissible and sometimes fatal to human beings."

"The leaflet tells how to take advantage of some of the habits of the animals in order to overcome their natural caution and their highly developed defense against danger, and secure them to the traps. It gives details us to the best places to place the traps and how to prepare scents to be placed as lures on weeds, clusters of grass, or stubble near the traps and along the animal's path.
